Abandoned child syndrome is a behavioral or psychological condition that results primarily from neglect or abuse during childhood. It is characterized by a pattern of self-destructive behaviors, such as substance abuse, self-harm, and suicidal thoughts. The condition is often associated with a sense of abandonment and a lack of emotional support during formative years. Symptoms may include difficulty forming healthy relationships, low self-esteem, and a tendency to repeat patterns of abuse. Treatment typically involves therapy to address underlying emotional issues and build coping skills.
